I remember that I was late going to school that morning. It was a cold winter's day and the snow was falling heavily. As you know, I have a little sister who is only three years old – the youngest in the family. She had a heavy cold that weekend. My mother works night-shift a few days a week and as I am the eldest daughter I am left to mind the house when she is away. That particular night I had to stay up until one o'clock and that left me really tired the next day.

“That’s three times in the last fortnight I have been late”, I thought to myself, “I will definitely get detention this time.” But that’s not how things turned out. I walked up the lane shaking all over. It was nearly ten o'clock and it was no wonder that there was no other pupil in sight. In I went through the main door. “Well Mary,” said the secretary with a smile on her face, “Late again! Aren’t you lucky that your teacher has a doctor’s appointment today!”
