Section A: Research Methods

Questionnaires are a popular research method used in sociology. Closed or open-ended questions can be used to gain information. Respondents can fill in the questionnaire by themselves, or an interviewer may fill in the form for them. This method usually creates quantitative data which is useful in large-scale research.

When a group is studied at different stages over a long period of time, it is known as a longitudinal survey. There are a number of advantages and limitations with this type of survey.

In order to collect qualitative data, other methods such as participant observation may be used. Research that produces qualitative data is usually described as in-depth.
