'Come on everyone. We will be late. We have to be at the Town Hall at half past ten,' my sister said impatiently.

When we arrived there was a large crowd. We all shouted 'No new airport'. A television reporter asked me to explain the reason for our protest.

'The mayor will decide today if the new airport will be built here. It is a very bad idea. We do not want the noise of planes all day and night, or the dirty air. Many birds and animals will die because they will cut down hundreds of very old trees. We like our quiet, clean town.'

'We ask the mayor to refuse permission for the building of the airport here. We want to protect this town for our children and grandchildren.'

'The nearest airport is only 50 kilometres away. It is easy to travel there by road or rail. We would prefer a new school or a more modern hospital.'

As I finished speaking, the mayor appeared. 'It has been a difficult decision,' he began, 'the plans for the airport are absolutely marvellous, but I have rejected them.'
